ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to acknowledge my gratitude to the following individual people and organizations as supporters and facilitators of my linguistic studies at Payap University.

I am thankful to Payap University and its Linguistic Department faculty members for their kind assistance in both academic and other needs throughout my study.

I am very grateful to my thesis supervisor, thesis committee members, and two external examiners. I thank Dr. Larin Adams, Ajarn Ken Manson, Ajarn Doug Inglis, Prof. Dr. Somsong Burusphat, and Assoc. Prof. Dr. Saranya Savetamalya for their availability, crucial assistance, and insightful guidance. I would especially like to thank Ajarn Ken Manson, who suggested the pragmatic approach that I used in Chapter 5 of this thesis.

I am greatly indebted to Prospect Burma for its vital support during this study and I assure them that I will be contributing to the marginalized people in Burma.

I wish to express my gratitude to Dr. George Bedell and Mrs. Marie Bedell for helping me onto this limitless academic path.

I am also grateful to all Christian brothers and sisters who generously extended spiritual, financial, and other material support: SIL (MSEA), Daniel Beck and MACF in Tokyo, the Blackwell's from Deloraine Baptist, the community church in Tasmania, Stephen Nolan, Rhiannon Golder, and all other anonymous supporters.

I thank my late father and my mother, who always reminded their ten children that what they could give us is not wealth, but the opportunity to acquire knowledge. I am grateful to my brother Fr. Joseph Kee Khui Om and my sister Bernadette Kee Myu Mang for spiritual, moral, and material support. I am so grateful to my wife and my two children, who had to cope with the extremities of life on their own in Chin State during the years of my study in Thailand.

I am proud to be a K'Chò and dedicate this work to my fellow K'Chò people.

Finally, my gratitude is due to God, who started this journey, sustained it, and brought to successful completion.
