

132551

EFL LEARNING DIFFICULTIES OF RURAL
MINORITY STUDENTS IN CHINA : A CASE STUDY OF THE LISU IN YUNNAN

Chongshun Bai

Presented to the Payap University in Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Degree of

MASTER OF ARTS

IN

TEACHING ENGLISH TO SPEAKERS OF OTHER LANGUAGES

Faculty of Arts

Payap University

July 2010

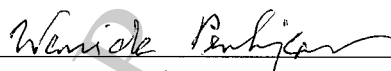

Title EFL Learning Difficulties of Rural Minority Students in China --
A Case Study of the Lisu in Yunnan
Researcher Chongshun Bai
Degree Master of Arts in TESOL
Payap University, Chiang Mai, Thailand
Advisor Associate Professor Jonathan Leather, PhD

The members of the Committee approve this Master's thesis

(Ms. Malee Kongwannit)
Dean of the Faculty of Arts

The members of the thesis examining committee

1.  Committee Chair
(Assistant Professor Wanida Penkingarn, PhD.)

2.  Committee Member
(Associate Professor Jonathan Leather, PhD.)

3.  Committee Member
(Dr. Pearl Wattanakul, PhD.)

Date of Approval: 5 July 2010

Copyright © Chongshun Bai
Payap University 2010

PAYAP UNIVERSITY

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to extend my sincere acknowledgements to Dr Ratanaporn Sethakul, former dean of the Graduate School, who introduced this postgraduate program to me at an international conference in 2005 when I worked as a simultaneous interpreter; Dr Jenjit Gasigitamrong, who offered me a Chinese teaching job at Payap in 2006; Ms. Malee Kongwannit, dean of the Faculty of Arts, Dr. Pearl Wattanakul, head of MA TESOL Program, and Ms. Sutheemon Chongsiriroj, the department secretary, who together kindly encouraged and assisted me to resume my student status in 2010 after several years of discontinuation.

My greatest indebtedness goes to Dr. Jonathan Leather, my thesis supervisor, who has ‘tour-guided’ me through my ‘journey’ along the ‘scenic areas’ of the thesis proposal, data collection and thesis writing-up over the past five years, with his state-of-the-art expertise in TESOL, rich experience in research and teaching, and resourceful guidance and concern.

My gratitude also goes to all the instructors for MA TESOL program at Payap University, including Dr. Jonathan Leather, Dr Jenjit, Dr. Graeme, Aj. Philip Keay, and Aj. David Richards, who jointly informed me of ‘what’, ‘why’ and ‘how’ in TESOL and generously shared with me their wealth of know-how and experience. I’d also like to mention two scholars, Dr. Huang Jing and Dr. Eliana Hirano, who sent me parts of their publications for my reference at my request during my writing of the thesis.

I would further like to thank all the participants in my data collection at the rural minority community of China including the local educational administrator, the school principle, EFL teachers, students, their parents, and several Lisu villagers. Without their cooperation and assistance, I could have never collected such valuable first-hand information. I would also like to thank my Canadian friend Mr. Mitchell Kelner for his proofreading of the draft thesis. Then I'm also thankful to my alumna Miss Watinee Kwangyoo and Professor Pearl respectively for the thesis abstract translation into Thai and the proofreading.

In closing, I feel grateful to my mother, my wife and two daughters, my niece Wang Xiaoyan, Prof. Li Shiqiang and my other relatives and friends, who rendered various kinds of support and encouraged me to accomplish my studies in the beautiful and friendly Kingdom of Thailand.

Chongshun Bai

5 July 2010