ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to express my sincere and grateful thanks to the many people who assisted me in conducting this project.

My deepest thanks go to Ajarn Fran Woods, my principal adviser, who taught me and widened my knowledge in the field of linguistics. She has encouraged me all through the difficult times. Working under her supervision is valuable experience for me.

My gratitude also goes to my instructor, Ajarn Debbie Paulsen for her dedication in correcting my project.

I also thank Ajarn Laurie Bailey for her efforts in helping to correct the final version of this paper.

Whatever errors or inconsistencies still remain are mine.

My heartfelt appreciation is extended to my best friend, Miss Sukchai Chawla for her friendship, moral support and encouragement all through our studies together.

PREFACE

The topic of the discourse analysis is of great interested nowadays. Many linguists try to find new topics on the discourse to research. The topic of participant identification is one topic which is of interest to many linguists. Sornlump (1983) studied participant analysis categories in her M.A. thesis. She pointed out that there are three main types of participant in Thai: main, secondary and incidental. She also describes on the rule for defining participant through feature of participant identification, maintenance of participant'identification and removal of the participant.

Yajai Chuwicha (1983:8) also studied the participant and their contribution to cohesion to Thai Narratives. She states that participants provide cohesion to the discourse through reference, kinterms and pronoun phrases.

Other linguist study about participants in different ways such as Somkiat Poopatwiboon (1973) who studied the participant reference in Northern Khmer. I shall confine myself to describing how participants are introduced, how they are reintroduced, how reference to them is maintained and how they are removed from the narrative. This description depends on the grammatical features and the knowledge of Thai lexicon and customs. The potential confusion is given in order to provide the foundation for the non-Thai reader and help them to trace back the participant. Specific attention is given to the character transformation since in the stories analysed I many examples of found character transformations.
