ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In writing this, I am made constantly aware of the many friends and colleagues, both Thai and farang (foreign), who have helped to make this thesis into a reality. The length of this paper, however, enables me to only mention a few of the individuals who have impacted this study and the course of my life in general.

This thesis could not have been completed without the kindness of Dr. Nirund Jivasantikarn, president of Yonok College. It was Dr. Nirund who invited me to Thailand five years ago, helped me to feel very much a part of life at Yonok, and engineered a faculty development scholarship to pursue the course of study culminating in this thesis. I will always be grateful.

I also owe a great debt of gratitude to my thesis advisor, Dr. Frances Woods. It is hard to imagine the last three years without the steadfast encouragement of "Ajarn Fran." Similarly I have benefited from the dedication and keen insight of Martin Culy and William Hanna, the other members of my thesis committee. The goodwill of the faculty and staff of Payap University is also appreciated; especially noteworthy among these are Dr. Boonthong Poocharoen (Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the Graduate School) and Dr. Amnuay Tapingkae (President) for their support of the Department of Linguistics since its formation four years ago.

A number of my Thai friends, students, and colleagues have been very helpful in getting the Thai portions of this study in order. I would particularly like to thank Miss Rujirat Chaisang of the Department of English, Yonok College, for her patience in dealing with my translation questions, and Miss Phodchani Norprom, a senior at Yonok, for her last-minute typing help. Too, I am and always will be thankful for the Yonok College class of 2532 for making me feel accepted in Thailand and convincing me to stay.

I also am greatly indebted to Dr. and Mrs. Ronald C. Hill. In their forty years in Thailand the Hills' have shown time and time again what it means to truly love, enjoy, learn from, and contribute to this culture of great beauty and wonder. And though the Hills may have taken on something of a parental aura during my years in Thailand, I will always be deeply thankful for my parents back in Loveland, Colorado--Roger and Bonnie Person. Mom and Dad, I am proud to be your son.

Above all these I am grateful to and for the one who has been with me through the entire thesis process as fan, then fiancée, and finally panraja: Suzanne Rene. Your support, love, endurance, and sense of humor in the midst of everything are appreciated beyond all words, dear one.
